ADMISSION RATES BY PROGRAM BETWEEN 2008-2013, AS REPORTED ON PROGRAM WEBSITES

It is difficult to gain admission to doctoral programs in clinical psychology. Some argue that schools with very "competitive" admissions rates are schools with exceptionally strong reputations and offer outstanding training. Although it is remarkably difficult to determine whether this assumption is true, data regarding admissions rates across doctoral programs often does help students make decisions regarding programs to consider. The attached table is based on data provided on APA Accredited clinical psychology doctoral programs' websites regarding the percentage of students accepted for admission divided by the total number of applicants between the years 2008-2013, and inclusive of 2014 when data were available. Note that across all programs with data reported, the mean (standard deviations) percentage of students accepted was 8.03 (6.99).
